

The Fast Forward Filmmaking Handbook A Practical Guide for Students, Editors, and Filmmakers (paperback) 2. Film Studies – Film Studies is the academic discipline that, broadly, deals with the theory and practice of film and filmmaking, as well as the history, theory, and criticism of cinema. As an academic subject, Film Studies includes the study of film as well as film related disciplines including television, new media, performance, media, digital media, as well as the history, theory, and criticism of cinema. Film Studies has emerged as a subject which has developed rapidly since its beginning in the 1950s and it has developed into a variety of different academic specialisms, of which there are several. At the heart of Film Studies is a close relationship between film, theories in cultural studies, and cultural history. These studies are broad, drawing upon a range of disciplines in the humanities and social sciences. The discipline of Film Studies is an interdisciplinary one, Film Studies is studied at all levels of education, from the undergraduate level, and its content is taught at postgraduate levels as well. It is not to be confused with the more general discipline of cinema, which is a narrower term that includes film. Early uses of the term Film Studies were used in the 1930s to refer to the study of the motion-picture industry. In the 1950s, however, it was used to refer to the study of motion pictures as a whole. In the 1960s, Film Studies was applied to the study of film acting and film directing, in the 1970s, Film Studies was also used to refer to the study of the culture of the cinema, including film studies of the theatre, literature, music, and popular culture. Today, Film Studies is used to describe the study of film in all its aspects and areas. Film Studies may be broadly defined as the study of film, a history of cinema, in more specific terms, Film Studies is the academic study of film as both an art form and as a medium. Film Studies courses are the ones that can be taken to fulfill a degree in Film Studies. Some courses may include readings, lectures, and study of film theory, while others may be more focused on specific areas such as film history, or methods of film analysis. A typical undergraduate Film Studies course may include a survey of the field, an examination of film history and theory, a survey of the various media forms including film, film performance, and film television. It might also include the study of film criticism
