Show HN: Pino – A simple REST API for React - ebernstein ====== ebernstein In the last few weeks I spent at #FlutterConf and #ReactConf I got to know many developers who are very demanding in their use of Rest APIs. Often they want to avoid using existing solutions to this problem, like the use of a third- party library and create their own internal API to avoid all the messy details. I'm one of them, and one of the main reason I love Flutter for developing my own app is the lack of necessity to build REST APIs. I built Pino to allow such developers to create their own REST API with the minimum code and complexity needed. The idea is to take care of the REST API specific details in the server side, like the routing of the requests, the format of the data, the way data is validated, the way errors are handled, etc. Pino handles all that by itself, reducing the developer's workload from 50% to less than 5% of the work. ------ tobr Looks interesting, but it does
