Multimodal Treatment of the Hearing-impaired Child. Families of hearing-impaired children rely on a variety of treatment options. We consider why such families seek each treatment modality. The purpose of this study was to use a theoretical framework to explain the factors that drive parents seeking multidisciplinary treatment for their hearing-impaired child. Qualitative data were collected from 22 parents of children with hearing loss and from 9 child-care center educators who worked with the children and their families. Audiologists, otolaryngologists, speech-language pathologists, and prosthetists explained the key issues that influenced families seeking a hearing aid, cochlear implant, surgical insertion of an assistive hearing device (AHD), and other treatment options. Parents' expectations about treatment were also explored. Parents do not select a treatment modality from a simple menu, but instead from a complex menu of options. Audiologists, otolaryngologists, and prosthetists explained the key elements that influence families' treatment decisions: (a) basic auditory skills, (b) social, familial, and medical issues
