Identify the obstacles to your IT professionals' success Employee turnover is a concern for almost every IT organization. Companies that have lost key staff members face a number of challenges, including keeping new hires in place and training and mentoring current staff members to keep them happy and productive. It's critical that IT organizations take steps to ensure that their employees have the training and support they need to be productive and to retain their employees. As the number of cloud and mobility resources that IT professionals need to support their organizations has grown, it's become easier for IT departments to be stretched too thin. As a result, it's increasingly difficult for IT professionals to dedicate enough time to being productive. A recent survey by the Bureau of Labor Statistics found that IT occupations are expected to experience the fastest job growth over the next decade, while all other professional occupations are expected to experience moderate job growth. Overall, professionals expect their jobs to increase by 14% over the next decade. However, IT professionals are expecting to see the largest increase in their job opportunities, with an expected 14% job growth, which is almost twice the 7% projected for all other professionals. With IT professionals going into overdrive to meet demand for cloud and mobility services, it's important to identify any barriers that keep them from taking the initiative to be more productive and from keeping their employees engaged and productive. Staffing issues It's not uncommon for IT organizations to find themselves overwhelmed by the demands of managing and supporting a growing number of applications, as well as ongoing security threats, in the face of a busy workload. The key to IT staff success in managing this growing workload is to make sure that the people who need to manage and support the IT infrastructure are properly trained and properly supported. It's important to identify the training needs for IT professionals in your organization so that you can identify the training and resources that are needed. If you don't have the right training, your IT staff won't be able to be productive. If they don't have the training and resources they need, they won't be able to support the infrastructure. IT professionals need to have the right tools and resources so that they can be successful. They need the training
