Community supervision conditions, or conditions of probation, are the terms and conditions of your probation that you are required to follow. If you're placed on Arizona probation after a DUI, then you have to follow the rules and conditions of your probation. Some of the conditions that you'll have to meet include: Attending AA or NA meetings Attending classes or education programs Notifying the probation officer of any change in address, employment, or relationship status Complying with treatment recommendations (including treatment for substance abuse) Attending any meetings and classes recommended by the probation officer Not consuming alcohol or controlled substances Under Arizona's DUI laws, if you are a first time DUI offender, then you have to complete alcohol and drug testing. This is referred to as a "drug and alcohol assessment" or "supervision drug and alcohol assessment". These assessments are separate from any treatment recommendations the probation officer may make. How Do DUI Probation Drug and Alcohol Assessments Work? The first DUI offense may require you to complete a probation drug and alcohol assessment. If you have a second DUI offense, then you'll need to complete a second alcohol and drug assessment. If you are placed on probation following a third or subsequent DUI offense, then you will need to complete a third drug and alcohol assessment. These are separate from any treatment recommendations made by the probation officer. As part of a drug and alcohol assessment, you will meet with a probation officer to discuss your drug and alcohol use and your progress with any recommended treatment. There are a couple of different ways you'll be able to meet with the probation officer, including: Face-to-face meetings Skype/telephone/teleconferencing Phone calls You'll have to sign a contract stating that you'll comply with the terms of your probation. The terms and conditions of your probation will be outlined in writing and will specify the conditions of your probation. You'll also have to sign a request for early termination of probation, if that is appropriate. Are There Any Penalties for Not Complying With DUI Probation Drug and Alcohol Assessments? If you don't complete a DUI probation drug and alcohol assessment, then you can face consequences. The terms of your probation will likely include a probation sanction. If your probation
