Thursday, December 19, 2017 Berta the dragon slayer By Any Other Name (Nanamorphic D-BOX) (2017) The miniatures and creatures of D&D and the Warhammer and Warhammer Fantasy games are amazing and they are awesome! I have a passion for them and I enjoy painting them and making new items for them and I wanted to share my creations with you. This website has been created for the purpose of discussing these amazing games. You can learn and share all kinds of things about these games, whether it is a new paintjob, a new model, a new idea or just a good laugh at some of the characters from the games. I hope to add a lot of great content over time to this website, so I hope you'll join me!

Rejecting as “ill-considered and unnecessary” the European Union’s new common rulebook to tackle tax avoidance, Iceland’s Parliament on Thursday voted to end its participation in the bloc’s group of countries that are pushing to clamp down on tax evasion. Rejecting as “ill-considered and unnecessary” the European Union’s new common rulebook to tackle tax avoidance, Iceland’s Parliament on Thursday voted to end its participation in the bloc’s group of countries that are pushing to clamp down on tax evasion. The decision by the Icelandic Parliament, which is made up of 128 lawmakers, came just hours after the EU’s leaders agreed to draw up a new common rulebook for member states to tackle tax evasion, to bring it in line with international standards. The parliament is bound to abide by EU decisions, but has the right to vote on whether or not it should participate in meetings, policy planning, and sharing information with the group. Iceland has long complained that it has become a “tax haven” in the eyes of the EU, with the government’s record of not participating in tax-related meetings and regulatory work being heavily criticised. With the European Commission and some EU member states arguing that there is nothing wrong with Iceland’s tax policies, the country’s Finance Minister Bjarni Benediktsson has consistently argued that the government’s non-participation in meetings has meant it has no say in the rules of the group. "Rejecting the common rulebook will be an important message to the EU that we reject
