Related Art Drilling operations in oil and gas wells require the use of drilling fluids to maintain well bore stability. A drilling fluid is any fluid that is circulated through a well bore as part of the drilling operation, e.g., a fluid that is pumped into the well bore and then returned to the surface of the earth through the well bore. The drilling fluid is circulated through the well bore in order to lubricate the drilling surfaces and carry out drilling cuttings from the well bore to the surface. The drilling fluid also serves to cool the drill bit as well as provide hydrostatic pressure on the walls of the well bore, thus inhibiting flow-off of fluids into the formation. The drilling fluid is generally in the form of a slurry containing oil, water and various additives. In particular, it is common
