CapsUnlock is written in C# and uses a .NET Framework library called System.Windows.Forms.dll. Description of capslock functionality, using CapsLock: The CapsUnlock tray application offers 3 options: Switch off CapsLock. When CapsLock is switched off, the user cannot accidentally switch on CapsLock. This option is useful for sensitive applications (e.g. encryption software). Enable CapsLock. CapsLock is turned on when the user starts typing with CapsLock already on. This works for all applications that assume the CapsLock key is still down when they receive a keystroke. It is NOT active for the password box, because it is already active by default. Enable/Disable CapsLock override. CapsLock can be temporarily turned on and off by pressing the Shift key while the CapsLock key is down. CapsUnlock can be used to implement this mechanism. The following features are supported: CapsLock support. The user can temporarily switch on CapsLock by pressing and holding the Shift key while the CapsLock key is down. CapsLock overrider. An application can be told to NOT assume the CapsLock key is down, because it will receive a keystroke while the CapsLock key is down. An application can implement the Override functionality by calling the SetOverride function. Insert key support. CapsUnlock can disable the Insert key. To enable/disable the Insert key, call the SetInsert function with the key being disabled and true/false. Exit CapsLock. The tray application exits automatically when the user clicks on the red X in the right upper corner of the tray window. CapsLock can be set off and on using the CapsLock override function, or you can set CapsLock off with the DisableCapsLock function. To use CapsLock override, simply start typing (you will see the CapsLock key in the system tray icon that is located next to the clock). Hold down the left Shift key while pressing CapsLock (while the CapsLock key is down you will see the CapsLock icon flash to indicate that CapsLock is on). To switch CapsLock off, simply type the first letter of a key, hold down the left Shift key and press the CapsLock key (the CapsLock icon should change to a leftwards arrow). To implement the
