The CNS is not only protected by the BBB and the blood-CSF barrier, but also by a strong CNS-specific immune privilege. Demyelinating diseases of the CNS are thought to be mediated by autoantibodies against the myelin component proteolipid protein. The concept of 'autoimmune attack on myelin and oligodendrocytes' leads to the discussion of two major mechanisms in CNS autoimmunity: firstly, there is a molecular mimicry between viral and myelin proteins (e.g. JCV and MOG) and secondly, there is a humoral immune response to a CNS antigen (e.g. AQP4). Both mechanisms are also discussed in the context of neuromyelitis optica.Q: Where is html5 display attributes in IE 8 and lower? I am trying to use the display property to hide the main content in a page when the screen is smaller than 768px. It seems like it worked in all the other browsers except IE. Here is my code:
