This Photoshop tutorial will show you some quick and easy ways to use the Delete feature in Photoshop. Open an image for Photoshop and let's start: Start to delete pixels from the image we will be working on. Click the Toolbox on the left hand side, and select the Pen tool. Once the Pen tool is selected, press and hold the left click button (the one that looks like an arrow pointing up) to activate the anchor point. Move your mouse over the image to highlight the area of the image you want to manipulate. As you move the mouse over the image, a translucent box appears around the area you're editing. Let's define the border for our upcoming amendments, by outlining our area of interest. Click the left click button to activate the anchor point and move it over to the corner of the selection we just outlined. Click the left click button and hold the mouse button down to constrain the mouse to that anchor point. Drag the mouse to enlarge the box around the area of interest. As soon as you release the mouse button, your box will automatically change shape based on the anchor point. It is important to note that at this point, the box is not closed. This is the first step in defining the area of interest. Open the Select menu on the far left of the toolbar and choose Modify > Expand. Once the Expand tool is selected, click inside the modified selection area and drag outwards. Depending on the complexity of the area we are working on, this may take multiple clicks. The Expand tool will expand the selection box to include more pixels around the area of interest. Once the selection is completely expanded, let's make it 2 pixels smaller. Click the Modify > Contract menu on the far left and choose 2 Pixels. This will contract the selection box further, and hopefully prevent any major issues in the area of interest. Once the selection is defined, click the top left corner of the selection box and drag down. This will create a new selection box below the last one. Let's delete the area inside this selection box. Click the Select menu on the far left and choose Clear. Click the Convert to Selection button in the bottom left hand corner of the image window. The Select> Select menu will now only select pixels in the

Deutsche Bank has axed about 45 jobs, mostly from its investment bank. It says it is taking this action as part of a "transformation" and that it has made progress in streamlining its business. Deutsche Bank cuts investment banking jobs Deutsche Bank has axed about 45 jobs, mostly from its investment bank. It says it is taking this action as part of a "transformation" and that it has made progress in streamlining its business. 27 Nov 2008 The cull will save around €10m a year in costs, although the bank says that not all jobs will be cut and that some will be replaced with contract workers. The cull is also a result of the bank's plan to cut costs by €1.5bn per year by 2010. At the time of the restructuring Deutsche Bank said it would report its fourth-quarter results in October. The job cuts are the latest in a long line at Germany's biggest bank. The bank has shed nearly 9,000 jobs since 2005. In September, it said it would axe 1,100 roles and close or sell around 2,000 branch offices. Its business has been hit by the credit crunch, falling share prices and the global economic slowdown. Last week, it cut its 2008 growth forecasts and said there is a danger that the bank may need to raise capital. Its investment banking clients have also shifted their business towards more "strategic" opportunities with companies such as Microsoft and Google. Germany's second-biggest bank has set out plans to cut costs after 19 months of losses in four quarters. Deutsche Bank has been hit by losses in a number of areas. That includes investment banking, which lost €671m in the third quarter. The bank has also suffered from losses in the commodities and asset management sectors. "The reduction in staff is the result of a plan which has been in the making for some time," said Deutsche Bank in a statement on Tuesday. "This restructuring is a natural next step in the transformation process of Deutsche Bank." Deutsche Bank said that despite the job cuts it has made progress in streamlining its business, making progress in areas including underwriting, FX trading, commodities and asset management. It said that it is now in a position to re-enter these markets more aggressively. It did not give any figures for costs saved or how much revenue has been lost due to the job cuts. "Deutsche Bank continues to make progress on its reform process. The strengthening
