Anisotropic optimization of vorticity-modulated spiral metasurfaces. We propose and theoretically and experimentally demonstrate an anisotropic vortex metasurface, which exhibits spiral in-plane modulation and its one-dimensional (1D) modulation can be varied based on the diffraction order of the vortex structure in an accessible optical regime. The spiral structure is characterized by a constant angle between the vorticity and 1D polarization rotation vector, the radius of the azimuthally polarized continuum can be tuned to four different possible values and 1D modulation can be controlled by rotating the azimuthal orientation angle of the vorticity. The realization of anisotropic vortex metas
