Anaplastic lymphoma kinase (ALK) mRNA expression in pleural effusions. Cellular expression of ALK has been demonstrated in non-small cell lung cancer. ALK gene rearrangements leading to the production of truncated or oncogenic proteins have been shown to be associated with an aggressive clinical course in this disease. Detection of ALK protein has been extensively utilized for the differential diagnosis of malignant pleural effusions and the identification of tumor cells. Use of reverse transcriptase-polymerase chain reaction (RT-PCR) has been shown to be a highly specific method of detecting ALK mRNA in cell lines and malignant effusions. The goal of this study was to determine the prevalence of ALK mRNA expression in pleural effusions and to determine the clinical and laboratory correlates of this finding. Pleural fluids from 116 consecutive patients with known neoplasms were analyzed by RT-PCR. In addition, 10 non-neoplastic pleural fluid specimens from asymptomatic patients were also analyzed. All ALK RT-PCR-positive specimens had tumor-specific ALK amplification products at the expected size of 200 bp. When compared with RT-PCR, electron microscopy, and cytomorphology, alpha-fetoprotein detection was the
