Oil Fires That Shouldn't Be Burning One of the biggest energy issues in Los Angeles is pollution from oil fires and oil-fired heating equipment. The Clean Air Campaign is working to reduce smog-forming pollution from oil-fired heating equipment by educating residents and businesses about what fuel is best for heating and cooking, and then assisting them in switching to cleaner burning fuel. Oil-fired heating equipment can use either natural gas, oil, or propane. The type of fuel that is best to use depends on the amount of heat you need, the type of fuel you already have on hand, and a myriad of other factors. The campaign is working to make L.A. County residents aware of the pros and cons of different types of heating fuels. "With our coalition partners, we are helping the public understand that adding oil, either to an already existing gas stove or to a new stove, is often not a good idea, and may actually worsen the air quality of our city," said Matt Pak, Campaign Director of the Clean Air Campaign. As Los Angeles moves towards its goal of reducing greenhouse gas emissions, the campaign will help ensure that the city's residents are using fuel most effectively and efficiently. By educating home and business owners about better fuel options, the Clean Air Campaign will help ensure that only the cleanest and most efficient fuels are used. Because of the Clean Air Campaign's efforts, the Los Angeles Regional Clean Air Action Team will soon distribute literature on the results of the campaign, to further encourage residents to switch to cleaner heating and cooking options. The campaign is also pushing to make LA's existing oil-fired heaters compliant with the International Energy Conservation Code. This would mean that the city's existing oil-fired heaters can burn clean fuel, not including biodiesel. The campaign is also educating business owners on how to assess their fuel-burning equipment's efficiency, and what types of fuels are most effective for heating or cooking. If business owners are converting to cleaner fuels, they can help ensure that they are responsible and are complying with local regulation. "We know that reducing heating with oil-fired equipment in the city of LA will bring significant savings to businesses and residents," said Pak. "More than 1,000 new clean heating options are available in the region – many of them are now being used by residents and businesses. LA's

that can exist for a long time, compared to other used isos. Set up a regular backup schedule to ensure your media is safe. Buy a decent external optical drive that you don't need to install. Buy a multi-format Blu-ray player if you're a fan of that format, or upgrade to the latest wireless headphones/speakers if you're a fan of audio quality. Get a multi-format DVD player if you're a fan of that format, or upgrade to the latest wireless headphones/speakers if you're a fan of audio quality. Take a look at the free capabilities of both your computer and your TV. While the computer will want to restrict you for a long time, especially on a child's computer, the TV will want to limit the amount of time you spend on it. Your best bet is to find a balance where you can enjoy the benefits of both without causing problems. The Video Home Protection (VHP) Live subscription service is a handy tool for parents who are tired of living in fear that their computers and TVs are going to explode. For a small monthly fee you can get a notification via email or SMS when your networked devices are showing unusual activity, so you'll know whether to look at it immediately, or come back later to see what you can do about it. If you're looking for a new TV, watch out for planned obsolescence. This means that your TV will change to a newer model in a year or so, and you'll need to upgrade your cable or satellite provider to a new contract, so you get a new bill for it. Monitor your children's online activity and use parental controls on your kids' computers and mobile devices. Make sure you've kept up with the latest security updates for your devices, and get a VPN (virtual private network) or other such service to ensure your computers and mobile devices can't be accessed without your permission. Set up parental controls on your kids' devices and use these to limit the number of hours they can use the Internet, for example. Use a VPN service to ensure your computers and mobile devices can't be accessed without your permission. Keep an eye on activity on the Internet, and delete anything that you're not sure about.
