Use brand new tools like the drafting table and carpenter's workbench to make stone, clay and lumber into structures and furniture. Then there is the possibility of using new designs that complicate or facilitate the work. More complex, advanced designs often require the creation of a large number of small parts that were previously impossible. Works that require significantly more effort are performed more slowly, but the result is more perfect. Get the 3D models on paper and show them to other students. Use the mockup to show students the details they may need to make to create the model. Now you can buy a lot of ready-made furniture, which is available in stores. But most often there is one or two inexpensive parts that are completely different from the model. To deal with complex elements that do not look like a model at all, think about what you are missing to achieve the result. If you want to use details to improve your results, decide which details will detract from your main work. If you are unable to draw accurately, fold the various pieces into separate pieces. It will look like a model, but it will have much less functionality. Stay in place, design the furniture yourself. If possible, show students what an ordinary room looks like in your mind. Go along with them and see how you would equip it. Try to apply the experience of interior design for your company to better display the features of your product. You may need to change something to make this interior fit its function. Make sure you enjoy making this furniture. Of all the tools you talk about, modeling is the most important. Find a good construction artist and furniture designer. Firstly, they will be able to evaluate your idea and help you create original furniture. Secondly, they better understand the functionality of the furniture. The tools from the book can be used in the next lesson on how to build furniture. You need to log in to add comments. Authorization | registration Confirmation code (characters in the picture)*
