The Vizimag .Q: Options for portable magnetic compass with National Geographic spec. I'm looking for a dedicated, portable, magnetic compass that meets the following specifications: must be hand carried read only, no calibration Must be portable The specific National Geographic specifications for the compass are: NWG5703 - Magneto compass for use with map NWG5705 - Low power magneto compass A: You can get a pretty good compact magneto compass from Amazon for about $7. I have no experience with this particular one, but there are many other small compasses. Usually you can get them in a kit with a rubber strap and plastic case so they are very portable. If the kit is only for a compass, you can save a little money by buying one of those two magnetic compass adapters that also has a cardholder on one side. A: The lowest power reading compass I have found uses nanomagnets to pull the needle one side or the other in a tiny lever (much smaller than a "hand held" compass uses to swing). I bought some tapered magnets, and I made my own lever magnet from short pieces of aluminum rod and a tiny magnet. The smallest reading compass I have found is only about 1 inch diameter, so it is perfect for a card like the one from National Geographic you showed. Charles Krupa/Associated Press Apparently the police who responded to a call on Wednesday night regarding a possible assault at the University of Michigan sued the university for not cooperating with the officers when they arrived on campus. The Detroit News reported the incident took place at approximately 11:30 p.m. Wednesday night after a man at a residence hall was stabbed, and the house was then lit on fire.
