B...Germ-line uniparental disomy of chromosome 7 in a patient with partial trisomy 7p and partial monosomy 7q by ring chromosome. Germ-line mosaic uniparental disomy (UPD) of chromosome 7 is a rare finding with not much information about its phenotype. We report on a girl presenting with multiple congenital anomalies, including bilateral club foot, cataracts, neurodevelopmental delay, and behavioral disturbances. Whole genome array analysis detected a 45,X/46,XX karyotype and a 46,XY karyotype without any 7 chromosomes. Subsequent FISH analysis and microsatellite analysis excluded maternal uniparental heterodisomy (UPH) of chromosome 7. Subsequently, array-based comparative genomic hybridization (array-CGH) detected a ring chromosome with no pathologic copy number variants. It was an isodicentric ring chromosome of the 7q22.1 region. After a literature review of familial cases, we found that our patient had a partial trisomy 7p and partial monosomy 7q. Only one publication describing a similar combination of partial trisomy 7p and monosomy 7q has been reported. The partial trisomy 7p region was initially detected at the pericentromeric regions of the proximal long arm. Although it might be a coincidental finding, the breakpoint is still located in the most centromeric part of 7p. In contrast, the monosomy 7q22.1 region mapped within a region of particular interest: the central segment of the terminal 7q, a region that has recently been shown to be of emerging importance in the genetics of neurodevelopmental disorders. The combination of the partial trisomy 7
