Bilal Abdul-Jabbar talks Sixers, his next project After spending five seasons as the first on-court general manager, David Kay was surprised to find himself a few months into his new role with an opportunity to work with some of the team's brightest young talents. It was after that first phone call from Sixers president of basketball operations Bryan Colangelo, calling to ask Kay to step down from his current position, that Kay's former boss, former Bucks GM John Hammond, eventually called to join him. "He always impressed me the most. I was just never sure I was going to leave Milwaukee and I'm glad I did," said Hammond, who is now the executive vice president of basketball operations. "I always thought that the best general managers are the hardest ones to find, and he was the best," Kay said of Hammond, who served as Bucks GM from 2013 until Kay was hired in late 2013. "He loved to play the game and was very analytical. With Giannis, Thon's recent injuries, all of these injuries that happen, Giannis is one of those guys, an alpha dog in the pick and roll, that is very, very good. It's the next step for him that as a GM, I would try to get him to understand. He takes more ownership of his role," he said. "When Giannis went down, that's something I said, 'I'll never play with him again, I'll never play with another MVP. We'll never win a championship with him. He'll never even leave Milwaukee.' He didn't understand, and I can't explain it, but when he goes through something like that, he can't let that come between him and his team. He'll never let that happen." Kay, who joined the Sixers as a scout before eventually serving as the first on-court general manager, had also clashed with Colangelo on a professional level. The two met after the 2008-09 season as NBA players. "We were teammates and rivalries happen," Hammond said. "We're not close. He's part of the family. He's a good friend of mine and I think I'm part of the family"

Q: How do I determine which OpenID sites work with Microsoft's OpenID Connect provider? Is there any documentation on which OpenID sites/providers work with Microsoft's OpenID Connect provider? I'd like to use OpenID Connect with a site like Yahoo, but I'm not sure which ones would work with it. A: Confirmed by Microsoft: www.openid.net Activating GALNT3 mutations result in Hereditary Elliptocytosis. Elliptocytosis refers to a spectrum of hereditary conditions due to defective RBC membrane proteins. We report here the identification of activating GALNT3 mutations in two patients presenting with predominantly macrocytic elliptocytosis with prominent lobularity. Using a candidate gene-based strategy, we identified six missense mutations in three GALNT3 isoforms leading to the aberrant glycosylation of one of these isoforms. Functional studies showed that three mutants displayed a dominant negative effect on wild-type GALNT3 and that only one mutant GALNT3 (R129C) was able to promote the clustering of RBCs during invagination. Analysis of the GALNT3 structure revealed that these residues are either directly or indirectly involved in the binding of the guanosine diphosphate (GDP) and mannose 1-phosphate moieties in the donor substrate. These data demonstrate that GALNT3 is an important enzyme involved in RBC membrane glycosylation and could serve as a candidate gene in the molecular diagnosis of elliptocytosis with macrocytic shape. Many of you have just arrived from the EU, so, before we begin, I will briefly give you the background to why the EU's rules are different from those here in the UK. For 30 years or more, EU countries have decided to consider that electric power producers have to provide a certain level of renewable energy, in the form of electricity, even though they do not directly burn fuel. They can do this, in this case, for instance, by paying the operators of local wind turbines to wind farms. This can, however, be a double-edged sword for domestic electricity users. You might think the green energy industry would welcome this, because it provides an incentive
