All teachers in Ontario will have to undergo training on the province's proposed curriculum next year. Last week, the Liberals announced that they are spending $51 million over four years to have all teachers in the province receive training on the new curriculum, which aims to provide students with a stronger foundation in all subjects and more sophisticated thinking skills. While Ontarians will have to wait until next year to find out if the new curriculum is implemented, all teachers will be responsible for completing the training they received in the spring once the curriculum is finalized. The curriculum currently being used in Grade 1 will remain in place until next year. Ontario's English curriculum has been under review since 2000, when former Progressive Conservative premier Ernie Eves made his first effort to introduce a curriculum overhaul in response to criticisms levelled at the previous Progressive Conservative government's curriculum. The Progressive Conservatives led the government between 1998 and 2003, when James Smith was given responsibility for creating the new curriculum.

(CNN) A New York state lawmaker has introduced legislation that would require presidential candidates to release 10 years of tax returns as a requirement for nomination, according to the legislative website NY State of Mind. State Sen. Brad Hoylman, a Democrat from Manhattan, told CNN he was co-sponsoring the legislation with Republican Sen. Brad Lander, who represents Brooklyn. "I am open to legislation that is needed to guarantee that a 2020 Democratic presidential nominee has committed to and adheres to the same standards as President Trump, who refuses to release his tax returns," Hoylman said in a statement. "For too long, our politics have become defined by who we exclude, rather than who we include." If the legislation is signed into law, the candidate would need to submit the returns by the end of July 2019. Read More
