If you're willing to spend money, then gedit or gedit-plugins is a very good alternative. We believe that the new Notepad++ has not only preserved the core features of Notepad, but even improved it. The present version is based on the 6.9.1 version. The integrated syntax highlighting and snippets is an additional feature. It is possible to integrate this functionality in many languages such as PHP, SQL, Java, C++, etc. The program interface is clean and simple. There are options to make the editor look like Windows Explorer. The tabs are a big plus in my opinion. No, we're pretty sure that no-one else is still using Notepad anymore.
