fuse. for java version 11, the Total Overdose Java Edition is the definitive multiplayer version of the legendary Total Overdose. Play against your friends and.Q: Designing a form that can receive only one image from user I am developing a little task management application where I have a single form with a File Open button. FileOpen is triggered when user picks an image to put into the Task by opening the image in Windows Explorer. The form itself has these labels. Description: A short caption for the task. File: The filename of the image to be received. Image: An image field to be received by the Task model. I have this in mind: Prevent user from uploading more than one image. Is it possible? A: You can enforce image upload through either the form itself, or a view helper on the Form. Assuming you're using Zend Framework, if you want to enforce this within the form you can use the Form token: // Check if the upload failed, if so redirect away, if($this->tokens->validateToken('upload',array('filename'=>$this->filename))!=false) { $this->helper->redirector('foo'); } //Check and optionally save the upload. if ($this->tokens->validateToken('upload',array('filename'=>$this->filename)) == true) { // TODO: Save the upload. } // Send the upload data to the view. $view->description = $this->tokens->getToken('description'); You might want to also use a check in your view to prevent the user from posting the file if the file hasn't been saved. Alternatively, if you want to enforce it on the controller level, you can do the same through either the controller itself or the view. Assuming Zend_Controller_Front, if you want to enforce it on the controller level you can do this: //Check and optionally save the upload. if ($this->tokens->validateToken('upload',array('filename'=>$this->filename)) == true) { // TODO: Save the upload. } Otherwise, if you want to enforce it in the view you can add
