From Books, Mens Blue Books, Procès-Verbal, and Note-Books.,Q: Kriging interpolation fails with a cyclic error I'm running a ppp interpolation of the elevation from a set of elevation points on a grid with a resolution of 500m. The resulting mean-value surface is vastly different from what I'm getting with GPS elevation data. Why is this happening? Surface plot: A: It sounds like a low-pass filter with very high cut-off frequency is required. If the filtering is applied after reading the points but before interpolating, the cut-off frequency can still be high enough that the errors are removed. However, if it's done before interpolating, the cut-off frequency is usually low enough that the errors just carry through. A useful trick for designing low-pass filters is to plot the "low-pass" filtered error vs. cut-off frequency, and then choose the number of samples and the order of the filter based on the slope of the graph (rather than the well-known "bandwidth-
