Verge capital allocated to Facebook ads as part of ex-Google's new firm Verge capital, the New York-based company co-founded by internet entrepreneur Andrew Kortina and Adam Shinawatra, has a big problem. The small startup is battling with multiple venture firms that are closing in on the end of its funding round. Now it appears one of the final investors has decided to take back its cash. Verge capital co-founders Andrew Kortina (left) and Adam Shinawatra. The firm ended its Series B round of funding in July of this year and received $3.8 million (£2.7m) from private backers including the New Enterprise Associates, as well as from two Silicon Valley-based firms that pledged additional funding. The firm is having trouble raising more and now possible predators around it seem to be reaching for some of their shares. All the groups involved have been touting their own shares over the past few weeks, so even if the firm agrees a purchase, it may take some time before the deal goes through. Shinawatra left Google in 2014 and is now CEO of the firm, while Kortina is a former Google engineer. Verge capital is headed towards a Series C round that may raise $15m. Rhabdomyosarcoma metastasis to the brachial plexus in an infant with cerebral palsy: case report and review of the literature. Rhabdomyosarcomas in the pediatric population are uncommon. They are even less common in the brachial plexus region. We report a case of a 9-month-old male with cerebral palsy who presented with a painful, irreducible mass in the left posterior neck and shoulder. Imaging revealed a mass at the level of C5-C6 with extension into the upper trunk, root, and proximal divisions of the left brachial plexus. Pathologic diagnosis was embryonal rhabdomyosarcoma. He underwent a resection of the mass and adjuvant radiation. He had a complete response to initial treatment; however, several months later, he developed metastatic disease. He died from progressive disease more than 6 years after his initial diagnosis. Q: Help with Group?
