Hundreds of thousands of people crowded the streets of big cities across the country on Wednesday to demand further action on climate change and its effects on the environment. The first of hundreds of "people's climate strikes" organised by school students across the world took place in Auckland, New Zealand. Organised by the New Zealand Youth Climate Coalition, over 5000 people took part in the protest in the Auckland CBD. Speakers from New Zealand's youth Parliament praised environmental activism and called on politicians to acknowledge the crisis. With the New Zealand government demonstrating little ambition in tackling the climate crisis, the activists demanded action as well as they rallied for a just transition to a low-carbon economy. Organisers for the Auckland strike said it was a "huge success" with "unprecedented numbers." While one woman told the protesters: "This is the first time that I've been in a crowd of this size – this is huge." Greta Thunberg, the 16-year-old climate change activist from Sweden, was one of the main organisers of the global climate strikes. Her speech in Auckland was watched by hundreds of thousands of people around the world. "The climate crisis is the biggest threat of our time, and it is much bigger than anyone expected it to be," she said. "I am here today not just to tell politicians that we are going to continue to strike, we are going to keep striking, until we get this working," she added. "I am here because we can do it, we must do it." Greta said the world was at a "critical point" in which the political class had failed to deal with the crisis, adding that this was "the moment we have all been waiting for." A big part of what was striking about Greta's speech is that she is not afraid to advocate for people power in the face of a system that is failing to protect those on the frontline of the crisis. "This is the moment for us to begin to organise against this system that we are all in," she said, adding that protesters must "take back the power." She said: "It is time for us to move from merely protesting into taking direct action." And Gret

← Previous Page | Next Page → # Printing text with fonts Photoshop can open and print documents in the most popular formats, including PDF (Portable Document Format) and TIFF (Tagged Image File Format). Both of these formats contain font information, so a font file, like the ones included in this book, can be embedded into a TIFF or PDF file. Some of the most important characters in text are the letters E, U, O, P, and space. By using the Photoshop Text tool, you can add text to an image, specify font color and size, and place text using a few methods. The image shown in Figure 5-5 shows a landscape-oriented photograph of an interior. Figure 5-5: You can do a lot with text. Photo by Adam Burton. Used with permission of www.adamburton.net. You can use the Text tool to place text on an image or to replace existing text. You can also resize an existing text layer or add new text using various tools. To add text, follow these steps: 1. Open your image in Photoshop. If you don't have an image open, you can create a new document by choosing File⇒New. 2. Choose the Text tool from the Tools panel. You can also access the text tool via the text icon at the bottom of the Tools panel (Figure 5-6). Figure 5-6: The tools icon helps you get to the most commonly used features. _Left:_ A close-up of the tools icon at the bottom of the Tools panel. _Right:_ A closer view of the tools icon. 3. Move the cursor over the image where you want to add text and place it on the image, where you want it to appear, using the up and down arrows on the keyboard. Point the cursor at the top of the page. The image moves as the text in the image moves. Make sure that you position the cursor above the area where you want the text to appear. To place text on a new layer and edit the text later, you must first select the layer. The technique for placing text on a layer is as follows: 1. In a document or file, click once in the area that you want to place the text.
