Effects are alterations to a layer that cannot be seen in the visible portion of the work area. An effect works by altering the appearance of an object, either to make it more interesting, to match another object in the same composition, or to adjust the way it moves. These effects are not typically visible in the final image, but may change the visual presentation of the work area. The most common effects are in the Filters category. Filters are alterations that can be made to the image. Filters are typically used to create special effects (such as channeling), special effects (such as glow, saturate, emboss, and blur) or for artistic purposes. The Multiply effect is a quick and easy way to make an image look grayscale or black and white. The Soften effect is useful for making images look softer or smaller. It can also be used to make objects appear fuzzier. The Sharpening effect makes an image appear closer to, or sharper than, the original. It can also be used to remove the fuzziness of images that have been softened by the Soften effect. In some instances, it can also be used to change the colors of an object. The Gradient tool is helpful when you want to create a special effect in the work area. West-based mining companies have benefited from falling commodity prices and high prices of iron ore while Russian steel mills have seen more cold weather delays in coke production. The disparity in price trends is clear for those monitoring the Russia market. Russians seem to be less willing to step on the gas with regards to increasing production levels, which may have been in response to the oil price roller-coaster. Prices of goods, including iron ore, have decreased, while the price of oil has risen. The drop in prices has been most evident in West-based mining companies. The price of iron ore fell from $90 a tonne in June 2014 to $58 a tonne in July. Fortescue Metals was one of the most actively traded shares on the MSCI Emerging Markets Index during the second quarter this year. It gained 76 per cent for the year. As the price of iron ore decreased, West-based mining companies saw their share prices improve. West-based mining companies Australasian Iron Ore (AIO) and Rio Tinto gained 21 per cent and 62 per cent, respectively. Rio Tinto, which is a major producer of iron ore in Western Australia, produced the iron ore in a jiffy when the price of iron ore reached its peak last year but the price has dropped by 30 per cent. The price of iron ore dropped from around $90 a tonne in June 2014 to $58 a tonne in July. It is still very early days for this iron ore price fall and the future will give us a better idea of what is next for Australia's mining stocks. Many eastern and southern hemisphere producers are still waiting to see what happens to oil prices. According to Business Insider, the price of oil fell from around $110 in June 2014 to $62 in July. While no one wants to see further drops in the price of iron ore, many eastern and southern hemisphere producers are keen to jump back on the wagon. Hewson is yet to break even on iron ore contracts between the WA and Queensland export terminals, with the company unable to deliver their iron ore at a profit. Chris Young, a commodities analyst at brokers Minter Ellison, said: "I think it is pretty obvious that the spot price of iron ore has dropped on the back of lower levels of production of key projects coming on stream."
