There will be things that people do that seem pointless, or even just plain wrong. We, as a society, might have developed rules that prevent this from happening in certain scenarios. In a time like this, the government can impose bans, laws and even the death penalty in certain cases. The best way to prevent these from happening is by enforcing and maintaining society rules. However, as a society, we still come across many cases of people who do these things and we, as a society, still find it necessary to take action. Each individual is different. We, as a society, agree on some rules which are acceptable and it is up to each individual to make the decision about what they find acceptable and unacceptable. The rules that we as a society have made are called laws. Laws are the rules that govern the lives of individuals within society. When the government passes laws, they enforce these laws and make sure that they are complied with. Law enforcement agencies make sure that these laws are enforced and that people who break these laws are punished. So, in a way, the government is the law enforcement agency of the society. This is how things work in most modern day societies. This doesn't mean that the government is necessarily right in doing things, it just means that we have laws and these laws have to be enforced. If an individual breaks these laws, the government will impose punishments and/or sentences on them. This way, society remains safe and everyone knows what is acceptable and what is not. Each individual, as part of society, has to make the choice about what they want to be a part of society. This can be done by joining a group and deciding to abide by their laws. This is how a society functions. There will always be people who don't like certain laws and there
