It is not affiliated with the manufacturer.8.12.2013 'POLITICS' We all make them. But a painting... "Politics," Vincent van Gogh, 1886. Oil on canvas, 92.5"x103.5" As they are, we would not have Vincent van Gogh's "Politics" and no one would ever think it was by his hand. They simply would not have recognized the work in this day and age. It is symbolic, rather than referential, in it's composition, for it was made for a group of friends, to celebrate the royal wedding of King William the Seventh and Queen Alexandra. And then, it was presented as a gift for their mother, Queen Wilhelmina, to celebrate her birthday. The princesses Helena and Emma, respectively the daughters of King George the Fifth and Queen Mary of the United Kingdom, and future Princesses Marie Caroline and Olga of the Netherlands, were each children of an elder sister of Queen Wilhelmina and King George the Fifth, with children being considered to be of more importance than of an older sibling. In this way, the children of the royal family were given the title "Princess," while their elder sister received "the Princess," a difference in language which is reflected in the paintings. In the painting, the five figures
