(Photo by Alex Wong/Getty Images) Democratic members of the House Judiciary Committee urged Chairman Bob Goodlatte to postpone a "recess" hearing to consider the controversial "Internet Bill of Rights," which would exempt broadband providers from net neutrality and other consumer protections. The hearing was scheduled for Thursday, but Democrats announced they would not be able to attend due to the House spending bill only spending four hours in session each day for the next two weeks. "It's a great idea, and we hope it's an opportunity to have more than just a 45 minute hearing," said Rep. Jerry Nadler (D-N.Y.) in a statement. "It's a chance for the subcommittee to hear from experts and the public on this important topic." The committee has scheduled two additional hearings this week, one on the Consumer Technology Association's proposed legislation to "modernize" the 2010 law and another on "The Future of Internet Governance: Innovation or Entrenchment?" Lawmakers want to extend the so-called "Keep The Internet Open" bill, which would give the FCC the authority to designate "specialized services" that broadband providers could sell that would be exempt from certain rules and regulations.
