Quick Question, I've installed and uninstalled Homebrew several times and the installation of it started to get really slow. Canned vs Homebrew, what's the difference? Anyway, I had to "reinstall" Homebrew, using a friend's installation made from a fresh copy (because I had gotten tired of Apple's restore, and had so far neglected to backup the folder Homebrew in the Applications folder). When I "brew install" from the copy, Homebrew says it has to download dependencies, I say ok. Then it asks if I want to continue, I say yes. Then it asks if I want to install them. I say yes. I never got a prompt to read the documentation for these dependencies. Just kind of want to know if I should've read the documentation before installing, or if I'm just an idiot who must have screwed up big time. The following is not the correct way of installing Homebrew, by the way. If you must have the command line tools, try brew install coreutils before brew install Homebrew. If, like me, you just want the command line tools, don't run the brew thing - just do sudo su to switch to root, then run the two commands. Thanks for your help So I managed to fix it after a little while. I had to do a reinstall for other stuff, so when I went back to brew trying to re-do the install - I accidentally hit enter after the dependency with the input for "install". Removing, reinstalling, and then hitting "yes" worked. I'm impressed! Be sure to tweet me and tell me how awesome I am, k? The following is not the correct way of installing Homebrew, by the way.
