CRAB (Searching, Retrieving and Analyzing Biology) is a versatile computer program which allows detailed retrieval and analysis of protein sequences, including matching of sequences to portions of protein or DNA molecules. CRAB also allows the interactive assembly of nucleotide and protein sequences into novel DNA molecules (which can be viewed in their entirety) or proteins (which can be rotated and sectioned to display internal patterns of homology). DNA and protein sequences (input) can be provided to CRAB in a variety of formats. A list of databases of biological information and data is included with the basic version of the program. A secondary program allows the rapid collection of details of these databases.
