Erythropoietin-mediated inhibition of blood-brain barrier penetration of hydrophilic, low molecular weight drugs in normal rats. The aim of the study was to test whether high doses of erythropoietin (EPO) would affect blood-brain barrier (BBB) penetration of the hydrophilic, low molecular weight drug, pyrilamine maleate (PM). Because EPO has been shown to cross the BBB at therapeutic doses, an attempt was also made to determine whether EPO receptors are present on brain capillary endothelium. Rats received 4-hour intravenous infusions of low (3.5 IU/kg), intermediate (21 IU/kg), or high (50 IU/kg) doses of EPO. Blood plasma concentrations of PM were significantly lower in EPO-infused rats compared with controls. For plasma/whole brain tissue ratios in the EPO-infused rats, the ratios were about 2.0 (low dose) and 0.6 (intermediate dose), compared with 2.3 in controls. EPO did not significantly affect the brain uptake of the hydrophobic, high molecular weight drug, methohexital. Immunocytochemical examination showed the presence of EPO receptors on brain capillary endothelium in normal rats, and no labeling was seen when normal rabbit serum was used as the primary antibody. We conclude that high doses of EPO decrease the BBB penetration of PM in normal rats.
