Rick Perry Gov. Rick Perry has a history of polarizing statements. For example: The most recent instance of his unusual statements came Sunday morning when he addressed the "heartbreaking" loss of 65 lives when a gunman opened fire during a church service in Charleston, S.C. "What has happened to us as a nation is beyond the Christian understanding of sin," Perry told reporters on the South Lawn of the White House. "We have lost our morality. We have lost our values. We have lost our way. We have talked about God. But what have we done about sin? We have a president right now who has just changed the definition of marriage." Perry, who twice declined to run for the White House as a Republican, said the president should focus on the economy and jobs. Perry's statement seems unlikely
