First record of the Asian rice gall midge Ankyra panfilovi (Fieber, 1876) (Diptera: Cecidomyiidae) in the eastern United States. The Asian rice gall midge Ankyra panfilovi (Fieber, 1876) is an exotic pest in the western Hemisphere, but relatively little is known of its presence and biology in the eastern United States. A single gall-forming, emergent A. panfilovi pupa (Pinto, 1908) was discovered in Virginia during spring 2008. Mature galls were present on leaf sheath roots of three rice cultivars in a growth room experiment. Eclosing adults emerged between 18 and 42 days after pupation, with male emergence first in late-August. Mating behavior consisted of circling around single females until the abdominal tips contacted, when pairs of wings were seen to unfurl and spread. Mating occurred within 20 to 30 min of emergence from galls. Males were not found on females after copulation was observed. Maturity rates were 95.2% in late-August, dropping to 71.4% in September, and 53.5% by November. Mean number of eggs was  $45.1 \pm 1.53$  per female in August, dropping to  $26.4 \pm 1.97$  in September, and  $12.1 \pm 2.72$  in November. deficit/hyperactivity disorder (ADHD) in adolescents. Numerous studies have shown superior MPH efficacy to non-medication treatment and/or placebo, and a response rate of approximately 70%, without differences between the long and short ester forms. Safety and tolerability of MPH are good in general, but depend on age, sex, and weight, especially in boys. Anaphylactic reactions and blood dyscrasias are rare, but more frequent in children than in adults. Treatment of children and adolescents with ADHD should preferably be part of a multimodal treatment approach with a combination of drugs with different mechanisms of action, including an ADHD medication.

You may have heard of me by another name: Starbound. I've been working on Starbound since its inception, and here I write about the nuts and bolts of it. Let's Talk Money As we've all heard, the past couple of years have been rather busy for Minecraft. We've had minor updates here and there, and a bunch of cool new content. Unfortunately, those updates and new content have all taken a lot of development time, and we haven't had a chance to pay attention to the app store or the marketplace. I'm not entirely sure why we haven't focused more on our income. I do know that I've been joking around with the developers on the same project that I'm working on on Twitter, and with the MIT TechTV crew. Forgive me, it may not seem like it because the project name really is Starbound. I'm currently in the process of developing a new game mode called "survival." I've been working on the gameplay model and the core mechanics. Recently, I finished up the combat system, which I'm very happy with. Now, instead of requiring combat against AI-controlled enemies, I've decided to just have combat with no AI. If you're familiar with it, you can probably guess the reason why... If you're a fan of the game, here
