professional advice. Carefully read the help files before use. Human IL-2-transgenic mice are hyporesponsive to lymph node-derived antigen. A subset of T lymphocytes has been shown to play a critical role in the development of AIDS-related complex (ARC). Such lymphocytes express high levels of interleukin-2 receptors on their surface (IL-2R) and have been postulated to be activated by proliferative signals delivered via the IL-2 receptor. To investigate this hypothesis, recombinant murine IL-2 (rmIL-2) was injected s.c. into adult mice and levels of IL-2R on a subset of peripheral T cells were analysed. A significant increase in IL-2R expression was detected on CD4+ T cells as early as 1 day after the injection of rmIL-2. However, a parallel increase in lymphocyte count was not observed. To ascertain whether the absence of a proliferative response to lymph node-derived antigen might be due to the presence of inhibitors of IL-2-dependent T cell activation, IL-2-transgenic (IL-2 TG) mice were studied. These mice, which have a 6-fold increase in IL-2 production, were injected i.p. with a mixture of splenic and thymic cells from a donor of the H-2 haplotype identical to the H-2 haplotype of the recipient. This treatment led to the development of an oligoclonal immune response without evidence of hyperproliferation. In spite of the presence of IL-2 in vivo, no evidence of IL-2R expression was observed on the surface of splenic T cells. These results suggest that a factor present in the lymph node may activate IL-2R-negative T cells and protect them from the proliferative effect of IL-2.#!/bin/bash # Licensed to the Apache Software Foundation ( b7e8fdf5c8
