An investigation of the prevalence and characteristics of ocular onchocerciasis in the northwest region of Cameroon. Onchocerca volvulus is responsible for the debilitating ocular consequences of onchocerciasis in Africa.

To evaluate the prevalence of onchocerciasis in Cameroon, onchocercomata were examined in Cameroonian patients with naturally acquired onchocerciasis. The clinical lesions of onchocercomata were classified and the severity of their changes graded. Serum samples were tested for the presence of antibodies to Onchocerca volvulus using a micro-immunofluorescence (MIF) test. Post-mortem examination of eyes and other organs was carried out where possible. Onchocercomata were found in 15/91 (16.5%) patients. Two patients had both nongerminal and germinal onchocercomata. In another patient, a large onchocercoma extending from the conjunctival surface to the sclera was present. Two patients had severe visual loss and all four of these patients showed a wide variety of onchocercomata. The prevalence of onchocerciasis in the northwest region of Cameroon is lower than the previously reported range of 25-30%. The clinical appearance of onchocercomata is wide and varied;

there is a need for surgeons to be adequately trained to operate on onchocercomata in order to alleviate these visual complications. Share this Page Juventus keen to retain Ronaldo Juventus boss Massimiliano Allegri told the Spanish daily El Mundo that he was keen to extend the three-year deal he signed Ronaldo in before the 2010 World Cup. "I am not a coach that thinks in three years. I want to extend for five," he said. "Of course I would like to have Ronaldo for many years. The problem
