The latest release contains some minor improvements. You can run this network monitor on remote computers on the same local area network (LAN). When you start Network Meter Vista on a remote computer, the traffic displayed in the display of the network monitor will be displayed on the network monitor on your computer. Want to see the traffic details on your screen at the same time? You can now do this from a remote computer on the same local area network (LAN) by using the remote configuration option. You can also remote configure your network, including DNS, WINS and the Network Server Settings in the remote configuration dialogue. Also, when you connect to remote computers through Remote Desktop or VNC, the transport encryption is automatically set to the RDP/VNC standard if you want to. Use the bandwidth control feature to limit your share of the available network bandwidth, for example
