Radiohead might just be the biggest headliner on the latest lineup for Bonnaroo 2017, and that is certain to draw in huge crowds. Radiohead hit the road again this summer and will be coming to the festival on June 15. They have not released any music since last year's Saturday at the Gorge festival in Washington. They have been keeping a low profile in the press. Radiohead Might be

Headlining Bonnaroo 2017 In an interview with the New York Post, Yorke said the band got little support from their record labels and no major press coverage during the 20 year gap in activity. This absence has led to questions about whether or not Radiohead will ever make music again. "I do feel that there was a point where there was a lack of clarity, which is you could have an album coming out and it could be a big success and it might not be... In any case, if I was on the fence, I would have waited and put out a record that felt right to me." Radiohead have been riding a wave of success since the release of their newest album, A Moon Shaped Pool, in September 2016. The album was a huge hit for the band and did very well commercially. It was nominated for Best Alternative Music Album at the 2017 Grammy Awards. One of their singles, "Burn the Witch
