We have these displays at the store that are just too cool and really I just want to reach out and touch them. Right now I just go ahead and grab a pile of pics and then I go look for some old project to work on while the weather outside is delightfully chilly. Today is a good example of that. I've been wanting a barber like table for a while and they were having a sale on a 16" x 36" table for $150 (!). I just knew that I had to get this one so it matched the barber stand I got at the DIY store from the Sculpt your Socks event a couple years ago. Here's my DIY barber table in all it's glory. You can't tell in this pic but the cabinet door on the barber stand opens up to make storage for your tools. It's the exact same style and size as the one at the DIY store and I'm pretty happy with how it came out. I started with the cabinet doors from another project and once I had those attached I did the same thing I did with the other doors. I got the doors at my local Home Depot for $30 each (!) and I painted them in dark green. I used a kenmore heat gun and a cheap paint brush to get the paint on there. It was a little tricky to get a smooth look for the paint to be as opaque as it was. I also used a stencil which was great because I love how well the paint stuck to that. So after I did all that I decided that I wanted to add a touch of leather. My first thought was to stain the cabinet door and that worked out well, but I wanted to do it more like leather so I used a tanning solution to get the color I wanted. Here's some pics of the barber table and the cabinet doors

Help me understand my linux distributions better. I'm running on Ubuntu, Gentoo, Debian and Slackware. And in all of these, I've seen a huge variation in the software architecture and the libraries that these distros use. I can understand this has something to do with them being different kernels. But why can't I see a single `cpu` package for an intel cpu and a `memory` package for the amount of ram (no, not RAM - not DDR2, DDR3, DDR4, DDR4-2400, DDR4-2666, DDR4-2933, DDR4-3200, DDR4-3600, DDR5-2800, DDR5-3600, DDR5-4400, DDR5-4800, DDR5-5600, DDR5-6400, DDR5-6666 or
