Dr. Life experience which has prepared him for the surgical profession. There are lots of fine animated MRCs tutorials (Video, audio and text- based) available for surgeon in training and residency on the net, but not many medical schools or universities have adopted this teaching method or when they have, it has not been sustained to the point where student find the new methods as easy to use as conventional face-to-face teaching methods. The aim of the study was to establish the views of medical students as regards to the role of residents in teaching them to examine a patient, as well as to examine student opinions about the teaching of ENT. The results indicated that students want teaching on an equal basis from all residents, and that time efficiency was important to them. Having experience of taking an otolaryngology patient from the bedside to the operating room was highly regarded. It was concluded that the training time spent in the skills laboratory by ENT residents must be reduced so that it is more suitable for students to practise. Prior to MRCs (international certification in ear, nose and throat surgery) the only specialty of. Students of the MRCs must realize the importance of teamwork in patient care and as such the course has been designed to show the role of the medical student in every clinical rotation. The course provides students with insight into the importance of teamwork and the need to work as a team. The course consists of a mixture of lectures and problem-solving activities and students are expected to attend both lectures and problem-solving sessions. It has been described as a short, intense course with a high interational component. The course includes: the opportunity to improve your clinical acumen, strengthening of the students' musculoskeletal skill and knowledge of injury patterns, history taking, examination skills, and practical skills in dressing wounds. The training will help the student to develop skills that are important in the clinical practice of ENT specialty.
