DESCRIPTION (from applicants): An understanding of the mechanisms by which environmental agents provoke, inhibit and modulate the immune response is essential for developing effective strategies for immunomodulation. The hypothesis to be tested is that the signal generated by activation of the CD28 receptor contributes to the immunomodulatory functions of T cells. Based on preliminary data, four specific aims are proposed: 1) to determine the contributions of costimulation through the CD28 receptor to T cell activation and proliferation; 2) to determine the functional domains of the CD28 receptor that mediate the activation of T cells by engagement with anti-CD28 mAb; 3) to determine the contributions of CD28/B7 interaction to the immunomodulatory functions of T cells; and 4) to determine the contributions of CD28-mediated costimulation in vivo. These studies will be performed with CD28-deficient mice as well as transgenic mice in which expression of the CD28 gene can be regulated.
