Thyroid stents are currently used in the treatment of different forms of thyroid cancer. There are a few problems related to their proper use, including the need for a correct indication for stent insertion and possible complications of iodine discharge. There are no studies that have compared the symptoms of a patient requiring stent insertion and patients who are not treated. Thus, we carry out the following study in order to propose a new algorithm for stent prescription. We retrospectively analyzed a consecutive series of 9 patients (6 men, 3 women; age 57.5 +/- 8.4 years) who underwent thyroid stent placement in our institution over a 5-year period. All of these patients presented with a known thyroid cancer diagnosed by cytological examination and treated by total thyroidectomy. The average size of the nodule was 18.9 +/- 13.0 mm (range 3-55 mm) and the average stent size was 14.8 +/- 9.0 mm (range 4-26 mm). None of the patients experienced immediate complications, except for one patient who had 2 days of transient neck discomfort. At the mean follow-up of 13.3 months (range 1-30 months) none of the stents had migrated or had been occluded. The nodules regressed to a mean of 6.6 +/- 2.8 mm and d0c515b9f4
