Massachusetts Legislature Braces for Trump Budget Cuts The House and Senate are nearing a final vote on the state budget. Proposed cuts by the White House and House budget committee have many worried the public education system could be greatly affected. Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren and House Speaker Robert DeLeo are calling on President Donald Trump to protect education by taking bold action on climate change. The proposed cuts could impact tens of thousands of students. "I'm trying to be hopeful, because of the fact that [Massachusetts] is a wealthy state, and we are at a place in time where we're rich enough, frankly, to have a pretty good pension system, and a good health insurance system," DeLeo said. "On the other hand, we are not rich enough that if we don't keep investing in the schools, and improve our schools, you know, then in a very short time, we're going to be subject to these kind of draconian cuts. So what we're trying to get is both sides of the equation." President-elect Trump has pledged to cut the federal budget deficit by slashing spending for international aid and eliminating the Affordable Care Act (ACA), also known as Obamacare. He has also pledged to eliminate or significantly reduce funding for the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA). Trump has called for a freeze on federal employee salaries for two years, a proposal that will affect Massachusetts. It will delay pay raises for some 8,700 state and local employees, and potentially millions of dollars in payments to federal employees. "I'm very concerned about the massive cuts to education that we're talking about — and the fact that we have not even talked about how you're going to pay for that," DeLeo said. "I mean, those are two huge parts of the equation, and I want to make sure the person who's in charge of the Department of Education knows that those are critical to governing." DeLeo says Trump's proposals are nothing more than a "budget gimmick" and that they "go against the will of the American people." "I think that it's a mistake, and I think it's un-American that people who have a business background would try to impose their business vision on governing," he said 1cdb36666d

Etap 2.13d Crack Full Version Download (This story was updated with details on the results of the Middle Tennessee District Court's jury trials.) After a lengthy jury trial, William Black was convicted in a federal court of using an "illegal" electronic surveillance device and possessing a firearm despite a felony conviction, Tennessee Bureau of Investigation spokeswoman Jan Morgan said in a statement. The Associated Press reported that Black was given a life sentence. He was also convicted in state court in Sumner County of money laundering and of evading arrest. He has a short prison sentence and is out on bond pending the state court trial. Morgan said Black was arrested after being indicted last August by a federal grand jury in Nashville. The device is still "being processed and has not yet been tested," she said. Rob Klima, a spokesman for the U.S. Attorney's Office, said Friday that Black will be sentenced in April. Black, 58, was first indicted on federal counts of illegal gun ownership and evidence tampering. He was also charged with drug possession. Black is a resident of Lebanon, where he was arrested Aug. 14 in possession of marijuana, cocaine, prescription painkillers and other drugs, the TBI said. After arresting Black, agents found a .380-caliber pistol and a digital recorder that was not turned on. Authorities said in a statement that they searched Black's van and found a digital recorder. Black was arrested on a warrant from the Sumner County, Tennessee, District Court after being charged in state court with money laundering and evading arrest. While on probation, Black violated the conditions of probation on a 1999 conviction for theft of property by a convicted felon, the TBI said. He is currently serving a one-year sentence, the TBI said. Black was previously convicted of unlawful gun possession in 2007, according to the TBI. He is not a suspect in the
