Using Adobe Stock for reference images It's easy to download — and purchase — images from Adobe Stock. Many photographers take advantage of the full catalog of photos available for free and purchase images that work for them. Stocks are royalty-free images. When you purchase an image from Adobe Stock, you own it and can do whatever you want with it, regardless of how popular or how often someone else has cropped, watermarked, and cropped again an image. It's yours for the taking! ## Finding Stock Photos Online You can find images from Adobe Stock online and find other stock photos by searching the Adobe Stock site itself. You can also visit websites that sell stock photography to find stock images. These sites are a convenient alternative to using stock photos because you don't need to sign up for an account or fill out a form. Stock photography websites cost just a couple of dollars for a use that you can make online or print thousands of times. Stock photos can provide a good starting point for a project. To search for Adobe Stock photos, visit www.adobe.com/stock. You can search by category (people, nature, sports, and more) or take a specific term to drill down to a subcategory. For example, you can search for _earth_ or _landscape_ to find natural images.

1. Field of the Invention The invention is directed to the dispensing of a plurality of substances from packages wherein each package can be maintained in a separate position and each package is retained in the position by a retainer. 2. Description of the Prior Art Many substances such as shaving cream, hair conditioners, deodorants, shampoos, cosmetics, lotions, cleansers, etc., are sold in a single package containing a plurality of discrete portions of the substance. More frequently, such substances are sold as a plurality of individual premeasured portions (powders, powders, etc.) in a "crushproof" package wherein the substance is dispensed through a non-resealable opening. As used herein, the term "container" is intended to include packages of this type having resealable and non-resealable openings. One disadvantage of the prior art "crushproof" packages is that they are not practical as return packages. Many consumers prefer not to reuse the package and, therefore, prefer to purchase a new container. Since the package is not reusable, it is not unusual for some of the substances to leak from the package or for the package to be soiled before it is returned. A number of proposals have been made for packages wherein the container is reusable. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 3,261,431 issued to McGeehan describes a thin-walled container in which a single article is spaced from a side wall by a string which is grasped by the user to dispense a single portion. The container comprises a bottom wall and a top wall defining the space for the article; a peripheral side wall and an inner side wall. The top wall includes a longitudinal slot extending along the length thereof. The side wall includes a locking latch which is insertable through the slot to lock the top wall and the side wall together. The side wall is hinged to the top wall for folding over on the top wall to enclose the article in the space. The hinged side wall includes a protruding hinge flap which is shifted to one side by the article so as to open the container. The container includes a resealable opening and a closure is disposed at the edge of the opening. When the container is closed, a band is disposed under the closure to hold the two walls together. U.S. Pat. No. 3,464,066 issued to Munk also describes a container which is reseal

Q: Where can I find Windows 2003 standard mail servers? I recently checked the local helpdesk systems and found some servers that have been running for years. I know one of the developers in the group and he confirmed that these were the servers they used. The problem is that I can't find any documentation on the.EML files for these servers. Where can I find them? A: I'd recommend contacting Microsoft Support, as they should be able to tell you where to look for the documentation. Otherwise, the application might be running a Windows 2000-based service or.NET application and the user should be logged into their domain. Otherwise, you can't get the specific details from OWA. to be continuing. Procedure -------- A standard neuro-oncological workup was performed in all patients.
