Achieving the optimum performance in low-power devices, such as user equipment (UE) using the MIMO technology will benefit from using a channel coding scheme that is tailored to take advantage of the data being transferred. Thus, there is a need to incorporate data-efficient block codes and modulation schemes in the uplink of an air interface to minimize uplink bandwidth consumption to reduce the peak power consumption of a device while maintaining or improving its transmission performance. In addition, as data services and applications become more robust and reliable, there is a desire to transmit higher priority data or signaling bits and lower priority data or signaling bits simultaneously on the same logical channel. For instance, it is desirable to transmit control data and normal data, such as voice data and packet data, simultaneously on the same logical channel in the uplink of a communication system to maximize the data rate of the system. As such, there is a desire for efficiently processing mixed priority data transmitted on the same logical channel.I've recently been working on a YouTube Playlist called "John Carling's List" on my channel, which attempts to compile a chronological list of all the videos which have ever been made about an individual, and of all their works. "The Digital Guardian" is my channel's latest video on the subject, showing it all in one place for the first time, reviewing all
