Gatorade: The History

In 1975, Dr. Robert Cade, a Professor at the University of Florida, was conducting an experiment to test the effects of sweat on electrolyte loss during exercise. He began researching on the effects of exercise on internal organs, specifically the brain and body's thermoregulatory systems. Dr. Cade noticed that people who sweated excessively were at a higher risk for developing heat stroke, so he decided to look into the effects that drinking water would have on the heart and brain. Dr. Cade realized that heat stroke is a condition that can be caused from dehydration, excessive exercise, and exposure to extreme heat, so he decided to use the best that had the answers he needed. What he found was that sweat does have an effect on the body's core temperature. Sweating is a natural way for your body to release heat, which is why your body is already prepared for when it comes to cooling off. So drinking water before exercising can help to prevent dehydration and heat stroke. Gatorade was born from the idea that swimmers should have a way to easily replenish the sodium lost from sweating. He stated that, "if we knew the amounts and type of fluid necessary to regulate body temperature, we could look for ways to prevent dehydration." Gatorade is the result of this research. Gatorade was created in 1976 by a team of scientists led by Dr. Robert Cade, and first began to be introduced to the public in 1978. Today, Gatorade is the most widely sold sports drink in the United States. Gatorade has become a household name for many young athletes and influencers across the globe. It has also been connected to a number of negative health and nutritional effects. Leading health organizations around the world like the FDA and the American Heart Association do not recommend the use of Gatorade as a sports drink. This is because they believe that its use is a dangerous, and could actually lead to some health risks. Despite these claims, Gatorade is still manufactured by several companies, including The Gatorade Company,
