Introduction: The Stroop effect is a phenomenon in psychology in which a human subject is presented with a written or printed word and is instructed to name the word. In contrast to most other stimuli that elicit a faciliated semantic processing the word that in some cases is incongruent with the direction of naming elicits the subject's response more slowly than the word that is congruent with the direction of naming. The term "Stroop" was invented by American psychologist J. 16Stutterfly, the home of celebrity selfies, announced an acquisition Monday morning of the mobile photo app location-based game platform Clue in an effort to expand its lead in the selfie market. Earlier in the year, location-based gaming startup Clue raised $30 million from investors including B Capital Partners and strategic investment firm Cross-Border Capital to build a mobile app that gives players the ability to collaboratively research information about a location and challenge others to solve the mystery. Location-based sexting has already become a booming, and controversial, business. With Stutterfly, Clue users will gain access to the social aspect of the app, allowing friends to tag and share photos with each other on a map, allowing them to find selfies tagged with similar spots. "We've been sitting on the market for a while and decided to get in on the ground level to partner with a company that could take our business to the next level," said Michele Zauschnig, founder and CEO of Clue, in a statement. "Stutterfly and our investors clearly have a long-term vision for mobile and the way people interact on the go. We see a great fit between our teams and cultures and we are excited to bring this much-anticipated product to market." Stutterfly said that since launching the app this past summer, thousands of users have added nearly 100,000 selfies to the database, generating nearly 5 million photo-based insights. "We think what the Clue app does is give people an easy way to add a layer of location-specific context to photos that they've already taken. The social aspects of Clue make it possible to ask questions and get answers in a fun and quick way," said Stutterfly CEO David Sanders. Adding another social layer will not affect the app's privacy settings, he said, despite privacy concerns over apps that track where users are and add friends from their phone books. "Our apps help people become more interesting by recording their words, behaviors, interest areas, and more and we think Clue's unique ability to be a mobile treasure hunt could be equally fun for d0c515b9f4
