This writer was rightly disturbed by the concept of a man keeping the body of his murdered wife in a safe. He believed it was worse than “the geysers of hell” – as Eddison put it in a different context. The plot is nothing special, really. A man, called ‘F’, searches for and retrieves his wife’s body, from a safe in the loft, where it has lain undisturbed for twelve years. The friend who helped him bring it down remains the last living man who knows she is dead, although the body is in the plain sight of anyone who enters the house. In the book, the body of the murderer is found in a drawer in the bedroom, undisturbed for twelve years. The safety of the body is represented by the safe-key, which F has stowed away, along with other precious possessions, in a dead man’s pockets. He’s stuck for a life story to give when confronted by the friend who recognized his wife, so he asks, “I suppose if you were asked you’d say my wife had been a Catholic?” To which the other man replies, “Yes,” and says nothing more. The details of ‘the affair’ are not of much interest. The most notable element is the human use of time. The novel is a modern
